Acceptable Usage Policy

You are solely responsible for ensuring that all programs and scripts installed or used on the services are secure and the permissions of directories and files are set properly. We recommend that you set the permissions on all directories and files to be as restrictive as possible. You are solely responsible for any actions and activity while using the services, including any compromise of login credentials.

You agree to keep all your login credentials secure at any time. We reserve the right to carry out audits to determine the security level of login credentials. In the event that we determine your login credentials have been compromised (e.g. were brute-forced, hijacked, stolen, etc.) and are being used or were used for uploading, maintaining, running unacceptable content, data materials or websites, we may suspend access to the compromised service (including but not limited to Customer Account, hosting service, user accounts, website, FTP service, Email service). We will notify you if such actions are taken against your hosting account.

BFP shall not provide legal advice referring to compliance of content and materials uploaded on or transmitted through our services. You shall be solely responsible for verifying whether your content and materials comply with any applicable law, including laws in jurisdictions where your content and/or materials are uploaded, hosted or accessed. BFP shall not bear any liability if your use of the services violates any law or regulation.

If your use of the services results in violation the AUP, we may take immediate corrective action without prior warning, including deletion of content or service suspension. Repeated violations of the AUP will result in termination of the contract agreement with no refund. BFP shall not be liable for any loss or damage arising from our measures taken against actions causing harm to BFP, other BFP customers or any third party.

We reserve the right to terminate the contract agreement for services suspended for violation of the AUP or the Service Agreement with no refund.

Any violation of our AUP should be reported to us at support@bfproject.ro

This AUP is an integral part of the BFP Service Agreement. For all issues related to the use of the services not settled by the AUP, the provisions of the Service Agreement shall apply.
